Keeping a good record of your work hours and pay can help you succeed in a claim for unpaid wages. You can use the sample forms on the back of this fact sheet to start your records.

Your records are evidence in a claim for unpaid wages!

Many employers do not follow the legal requirement to maintain accurate records showing how many hours their employees worked, wages earned and payroll deductions. If the employer fails to keep a record of your employment, a judge or Department of Labor investigator will rely on the records you maintained as evidence.

Spread the word!

If you are not getting paid, your co-workers are probably not getting paid either. Encourage your co-workers to keep records to protect their rights. The more workers there are, the more pressure there is on the employer to obey the law.

If you think that your wage and hour rights have been violated and want free legal assistance, call the number for the Employment Law Clinic on the front of this fact sheet.
